A sign of the times: birds are now mimicking cell phone ringing tones.

Is It a Bird or a Cell Phone?

Imagine that you are taking a peaceful walk in the British countryside, when suddenly you hear the annoying sound of mobile phones going off all around you. Before you start looking for any loquacious human culprits, maybe you should look to the trees instead. The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds has found that British birds, such as starlings, are mimicking the noise of cell phone ringing tones. Mike Everett, a spokesman for the society, says that birds have long imitated man-made sounds from human whistling to car brakes screeching.

"When I pray for Mohammad, I feel better," says Ashrafi (with Fahina, right, and Farqad).

Baraheen Ashrafi

Married by tradition, but their hearts soon followed

At first it seemed as though custom, not Cupid, had united Mohammad Salahuddin Chowdhury and his wife, Baraheen Ashrafi, both of whom were born in Bangladesh. "It was an arranged marriage," Ashrafi explains. The pair, whose union was set up by their families, met for the first time at their 1992 wedding in their homeland. "It took time to get to know him," says Ashrafi, 28, but true love slowly blossomed. "He was very understanding, very nice."

After joining her husband in New York City nine years ago (he came to the city in the late 1980s), Ashrafi, a homemaker, embraced her new life while honoring her Muslim faith. They prayed together each morning, including on Sept. 11, shortly before Chowdhury left their apartment in Woodside, Queens, for his job at the Windows on the World restaurant in the Trade Center. Still reeling just two days after the tragedy, Ashrafi gave birth to a son, naming him Farqad, which means "star." In the months since, she has struggled to regain her footing in the face of occasionally derisive words and actions from strangers. One day a group of teens spotted her in traditional Muslim dress and jeered, "Let's go for a jihad."

Hardest of all has been explaining Chowdhury's death to their 6-year-old daughter Fahina. "He's in the stars," Ashrafi told her. The little girl responded by asking for binoculars. "I want to see my dad," she said.
